

MORNING APPEAL.

Sunday.....January 1, 1888.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Today the figures which tell of the advent of a new year will stare every reader of the APPEAL in the face.

The APPEAL feels safe in wishing everybody, those who patronize the APPEAL, and those who do not, a very happy new year, and all that it implies.

Everybody in Carson ought to feel a little better off at the beginning of this year than last. Business in this city has certainly been better than for some years before; real estate has advanced, and all business men agree that their books when submitted to their annual balancing will make a better showing on the credit side of the ledger than in 1886.

The senseless political turmoil which shook this county in 1886 was happily absent in 1887, and everybody feels the beneficial effects of the change. Carson is today on a solid business footing, and there is no reason why each succeeding year will not be better than the last. All we need here is concert of action and faith in our own capacities and resources.

Three Figures.

Today you can write in the date line of your letter three figures of the same kind, three 8s; for instance 1888. It has been 111 years since anyone has been able truthfully to write three same figures together, namely in 1777. Then there was a big amount of trouble in what United States then existed, or rather, what of this nation was struggling for existence. At that time King George's soldiers were making it very warm for the patriots of this land, who were trying to make a new nation. Had those patriots not succeeded every last one of them would have been a rebel, most of them would have been hung, and not one of them could have ever held office under the Government. This reminds us that revolutions accomplished make patriots, and that failures make rebels; or in other words, nothing is successful but success. We don't think that there is a man now living who put 1777 at the head of his letters. And in 111 years a man can again use three same figures in his date line—1999. Not a human living now will be here to do that next three figuring unless medical and sanitary science achieves great wonders.

Unique Wedding Cards.

The wedding cards of Maurice Bernhardt, delicately engraved on parchment, have been issued.

On one of them her Highness the Princess Louise Jablonowski informs you of the marriage of her daughter, the Princess Serka Jablonowski, with Maurice Bernhardt, and begs that you will assist at the marriage ceremony in the Church of St. Honore d'Eylau, on the 29th of December.

This reading is surmounted by a ducal coronet.

On the other cards are the arms of Sara Bernhardt, the well-known mask of death crossed by a dagger and a jester's bauble, with the initial "B," and the famous motto, "Quand même," followed by a like invitation.

The Parisian papers say that these cards will set the fashion for the universe.

—The small pox has been introduced in San Francisco by an infected Chinese steamer. By the time the friends of the Mongolians nurse a small pox patient in their families and handle a few funerals their love for the yellow man will somewhat abate.

—The big strike in Pennsylvania shows very bad management. The men who would order 40,000 laboring men to quit work in the dead of Winter ought to be deposed and kicked out of the Order they misrule.

—Yesterday there was a panic at Chicago at a children's festival. A school superintendent who yelled "fire" and caused trouble has been arrested.

Advertised Letters.

There is a law on the statute books of the United States, which requires Postmasters to collect one cent each on advertised letters.

This law has been enforced in the East, but not on this coast. A late order of the Postoffice Department instructs all Postmasters to enforce it, consequently a cent additional must be paid for an advertised letter. The law is an obnoxious one, and the best way to secure its repeal is to strictly enforce it.
